8IGHTWAYS®
TO STAY HEALTHY BEYOND CANCER
Cancer Is Hard. No two ways about it. Diagnosis and treatment can be frightening and exhausting, and even after you’ve made it past those hurdles, you need to adjust to life as you move beyond cancer.

You’re not alone. There are more people in the United States living with a cancer diagnosis than ever before, and many lead active, meaningful and health-filled lives.

These eight “ways” can help you look after your health and well-being as a survivor. Your doctor can help guide you. And wherever you are in your cancer experience – just diagnosed, in treatment, or done with treatment – even small healthy changes can lead to big benefits.

1. Look After Your Mental Health
A diagnosis of cancer, and everything that follows, can impact mental and emotional health. And it’s common for survivors to have stress, anxiety, depression and related issues at some point. So, it’s important to make your mental health as much a priority as your physical health. If you ever feel that you might need help, reach out to a health professional. Treatments, like talk therapy and medication, can help you feel better.

Tips
- For support and resources, contact the National Alliance on Mental Health (NAMI) Helpline at 800-950-NAMI or visit nami.org.
- If you’re in crisis, call 988 - The Suicide & Crisis Lifeline.
- Move your body. In addition to professional care, physical activity, like walking and yoga, can help with anxiety and depression.

2. Don’t Smoke
You’ve heard it before. But, if you smoke, the single best thing you can do as a survivor is stop. It’ll lower your risk of developing a second cancer as well as heart disease, stroke and other serious diseases that can also impact survivors. Yes, it’s hard. But you can do it. And if you don’t smoke, be sure to stay smoke-free and try to avoid secondhand smoke.

Tips
- Keep trying! It often takes many tries before you quit for good.
- Talk to a health care provider for help; it can double your chances of success.
- Call 800-QUITNOW (866-QUITYES in IL) or visit smokefree.gov for extra help.

3. Be Physically Active
For many reasons, it can be hard for everyone to fit physical activity into their days. But its benefits for cancer survivors are really worth the effort – even for those in the middle of treatment. Regular activity improves overall health, boosts energy and mobility and helps with anxiety, depression and cancer-related symptoms. Plus, it may lower the risk of recurrence and improve survival after cancer.

Start by moving a little more than you normally would. Even small amounts can have big benefits. Do what you can. And slowly build up over time. A good long-term goal is 30 minutes or more of daily activity (like walking), plus strength activities (like stretching and using resistance bands) two or more times per week.

Tips
- Start slowly with any new program and don’t be shy about asking for help.
- Fit in small activities during the day, like taking the stairs a floor or two, walking from the far end of the parking lot and taking a regular stretching break during the workday.

4. Maintain a Healthy Weight
With the stress, treatment side effects and changes to routines that a cancer diagnosis can bring, weight can be a tough issue for many survivors. Plus, body shape can naturally change after cancer. But trying to keep weight in check is one of the best things you can do to improve your overall health and quality of life.

Tips
- Avoid sugary drinks.
- Get enough sleep.
- Choose smaller portions, and eat more slowly.
- Limit screen time, and try to stand more.

5. Eat A Healthy Diet
It may be surprising to hear, but the healthiest diet for survivors is the same as it is for everyone else. And it’s really pretty simple. Try to focus on fruits, vegetables, whole grains, beans and healthy fats, like olive and canola oil. And limit red meat, processed meat and full-fat dairy.
Tips
- Make fruits and vegetables a part of every meal.
- Choose whole-grain cereal and whole-wheat bread over sugary cereals and white bread.
- Cut back on fast food and store-bought meals. Instead, try planning and making meals at home ahead of your week.
- Eating a healthy diet is best — but consider a standard multivitamin if you regularly fall short.
- Follow food safety steps to avoid food poisoning.

6. Limit Alcohol – Zero is Best
The more we know about alcohol, the more we know that not drinking is the healthiest choice overall. Alcohol can have many risks, including an increased chance of another cancer, even at low levels.

Tips
- Choose alcohol-free drinks at meals and parties. And plan ahead and bring your own if you have to.
- Stock up on healthy, alcohol-free options at home, like fizzy water.
- Talk to a health care professional if you feel you have a problem with alcohol, or if you need help with stress, anxiety, or similar issues.

7. Stay Connected With Friends, Family, And Other Survivors
There is real power in staying connected with friends, family and other cancer survivors. Keeping up and building on a support network can significantly improve quality of life, and possibly even prognosis. Yet, cancer can feel isolating for many survivors even in today’s social media world. So, if you need help connecting or re-connecting, reach out to a health professional or your oncology team.

Tips
- Schedule a time each week to get together with friends or family.
- Take part in meetings for cancer survivors, which can be a great way to share feelings, concerns, and helpful information with those who’ve been through similar things.
- Connect in the way that works best for you: In-person, or virtually with video, social media, phone or email.

8. Get Screening Tests And Go To Your Regular Check-Ups
As a survivor, it’s important to go to your regular post-treatment check-ups with your primary care doctor and oncology team. These visits are not only key to your health as a survivor but also great places to share any concerns or questions you have about your health. Team up with your providers to manage your health needs.

In addition to any follow up tests specific to your cancer, it’s also important to keep getting recommended screening tests for other cancers and other disease risk factors.

Talk to your doctor about tests that screen for:
- Breast cancer
- Colon cancer
- Cervical cancer
- Lung cancer (for people who smoke or used to smoke)
- Prostate cancer
- Hepatitis C
- High blood sugar
- High blood pressure
- Unhealthy blood cholesterol
- Osteoporosis

Also key is keeping up with your medications — whether they’re for your cancer or other health issues. If you’re having trouble, talk to your provider. Together, you can make a plan to get back on track.
